

The Shakespeare's Globe theater was first built in 1599. This is where every Shakespeare's play was first played. This is one of the main theaters of London. In the entrance we can see writing « Totus mundus agit histrionem » that means « The entire world is a theater. The 26th of June in 1613, this theater burnt down during one of the plays of Henry VIII written by Shakespeare because of a shot fired for special effect. The current version of the theater is a perfect replica of the first Globe theater. It was built by Theo Crosby.

What makes this theater so special is that it has no roof. Nowadays plays are only played during summer when there is sun and welcome 200 persons. Nonetheless, formerly plays used to be played all year long and welcomed more than 1000 persons! Indeed, this place is full of history. According to the man who introduced us to the globe who is an actor, it is an honor to play in a such theater. We can imagine that!

After visiting the Globe Theater we went doing some theater in a rehearsal room. I really like this part because I do some theater and I really enjoyed doing with my classmates. That was really funny and amazing and above all, something unforgettable as the beautiful roof that was only above the scene. It represented the sky. The actor said it represented God and heaven as if when the actors are playing God is watching and heaven is closer than ever.
